Health Center condoms safe from recall

Kate Montero
Flyer Staff Writer

A recent condom recall by Ansel Personal Products, a New Jersey company, raised concerns that the condoms distributed by the SSU Student Health Services were part of the defective lot.

The recall of 57 million condoms included several LifeStyles brands, the condom brand issued by the Health Center. However, Administrative Director for Student Health Services Jennifer Berkman said, "The lot numbers that were affected were not the lot numbers we were given."

Berkman said that problems with shipping or prolonged storage could have caused the defect, and that the recall is just more proof that old condoms should be replaced on a regular basis.

Condoms are about 70 percent effective in preventing pregnancy and the contraction of sexually transmitted diseases, but are about 97 percent effective when used with a backup of Nonoxynol-9, a spermicide, Berkman said.

Concerning the reliability of condoms, Berkman said, "There is still risk factor that you can't control."

Student Health services offers help to students who want to prepare for safe sexual experiences. According to Berkman, the condoms distributed by the center are the same brands that can be found in stores, only the center provides them for free.

A study in a 1989 Consumer Reports tested several condoms for efficiency levels. LifeStyles Extra Strength Lubricated, a brand available at the Health Center, tested well, with a projected maximum failure rate of 1.5 percent. Other brands such as Sheik's Non Lubricated Plain End or Ramses's NuFORM had projected maximum failure rates as high as four percent.

The chances of becoming pregnant or contracting an STD is not only determined by the choice of condoms, but also the decisions a person makes, according to Berkman.

Berkman acknowledged that the college years are an age of experimentation. "They're supposed to be," she said, "But it's not a moral issue, it's a health decision."

Berkman said she believes this is an age of awareness, and more people are making better decisions concerning safe sex. She said that about 25 percent of college students are not sexually active and choose to remain abstinent for both moral and health reasons.

"I think that students are making more conservative choices than they did 10 years ago," said Berkman.

Credit card companies face bans on some campuses

National Student News Service

Credit card companies that lure students into applying for credit cards with free T-shirts, mugs and pens might soon become a rare sight on college campuses if some students and administrators have their way.

Opponents of the credit card companies claim that aggressive marketing practices used by the companies unethically targets college students with no money and no credit history. The result is thousands of students with severe debt problems.

A bad credit record can adversely affect a student's ability to finance a house, secure a car loan or even get a job.

A recent survey conducted by the National Credit Card Counseling Service, reveals that credit card ownership among college students has risen dramatically over the past five years. The survey reports that 64 percent of all students have credit cards and 20 percent of students have four or more credit cards.

"We have noticed a huge increase in student credit card debt," said Alan Franklin, president of the American Credit Alliance, a credit card counseling service. "Giving a credit card to a student is like putting a steak in front of a mountain lion and expecting it not to touch it," he said.

According to Franklin, students are attractive targets for credit card companies because the companies assume students will be able to repay their debt in the future when they get a job or their parents will pay off the debt if the student gets into trouble.

"Frankly, credit card companies issue cards to students irresponsibly," said B.J. Danielson, author of several books on credit card debt and current director of a credit counseling service, Credit Master.

"Students can receive a card without the necessary income to support what they are spending. Students do not have to go through the normal qualifying

Crossroads opening night a success

Aaron Skolnik
Flyer Staff Writer

The doors to the much-anticipated Crossroads were finally opened Saturday, Nov. 1 to an enthusiastic crowd. SSU's campus pub, a project of the SGA and the Alcohol Task Force, was standing-room-only for the majority of the evening, as resident and commuter students alike got their first look at the club.

Dino from 95.9 "The Coast" provided the music in a live broadcast as students danced and socialized.

"Opening night was a huge success," said Joe Oravec, director of Student Activities and Organizations.

"We were really pleased with the large crowd." While no official count of attendance was available at press time, the Crossroads was near capacity for almost the entire evening.

The evening did have its problems, however, as the crowd exceeded expectations. At midnight, two hours before the scheduled closing, all of the available beer had been sold. There was also a shortage of beer glasses.

With the large number of people, there was a lack of seating, so most students had to stand up for most of the evening. After midnight, when the disc jockey from "The Coast" departed, the management of the club was left scrambling for music.

ResNet continues to suffer delays

David Ferrera
News Editor

The wiring project known as Port For Every Pillow or ResNet has fallen behind schedule and will not be completed until Nov. 17, according to recent estimates by Kenneth Kanarr, director of networking and communications.

Over the summer, eight of the residence halls were wired by 24 student employees, who were supervised by PrimeNet, a private contractor. Since September, however, the student workers have been unavailable and the wiring duties have been taken over by professionals, according to Jerome Waldron, assistant vice president of academic projects.

St. Martin and Chesapeake Halls continue to undergo the wiring process, which is now targeted for completion a month behind the last scheduled date, Oct. 15. Waldron said the professional workers have had to overcome some problems that did not arise in the summer, such as working in rooms while students live in them.

Waldron said that students in the two residence halls who paid the $30 activation fee to access ResNet can expect to receive some form of reimbursement for the failure to deliver the service for most of the semester.

The reimbursement will at the very least be prorated, meaning students will receive a minimum of two-thirds of the fee back. There is also the possibility for a full refund, but students can definitely expect to see most of their money returned, according to Waldron.

The delays have resulted from a smaller crew working since the beginning of the semester. Waldron said he was not sure how many PrimeNet employees had been assigned to the job, but did say it was less than the 26 person crew that worked over the summer.

Some students in the two halls have complained about the inefficiency of the workers throughout the semester. Several students have reported witnessing five or more crew members gathered in a room where only one of the workers was actually busy, the rest were socializing.

Other complaints have included finding cigarette butts on the walkways, claims that workers played a resident's CDs on his stereo and jobs being done incorrectly the first time.

Waldron said he had not heard of these complaints and that the only reports he had received were complaints of noise and dust. "All in all the students have dealt with the inconvenience very well," he said.

Area Director Jon Houze said he has received a small number of complaints and the workers have been very cooperative in addressing student concerns.

The delays and increased use of professional workers have increased the costs of the project the past two months and Waldron no longer expects to come in under budget as had been previously anticipated. The cost of the project is expected to reach the $1.2 million budgeted, but is still $400,000 under the original estimate.

The remaining schedule for completion of the wiring project includes plugging holes in the rooms by Nov. 7. An email from Kanarr stated, "With any luck the activation date will be sooner."

No movies to be seen on SSU-TV this year

David Ferrera
News Editor

Students hoping to see movies on campus cable channel 12 this year are in for a disappointment. Assistant Director of Housing and Residence Life David Gutoskey said there would not be any movies shown during the 1997/98 academic year.

Movies had been made available to channel 12, also known as SSU-TV, in the past through an agreement with the University of Maryland at Eastern Shore (UMES). SSU and UMES would equally divide the costs for 12 films and share them throughout the year.

In August 1997, UMES

informed SSU that Film Inc., who had supplied the two schools with movies, had gone out of business, according to Cynthia Cornish, SSU-TV manager. UMES also told SSU it planned to independently seek a new contract with another company.

Housing and Residence Life has been accused of dragging its feet on providing funding for the movies, but Gutoskey says this isn't the case. According to Gutoskey, with such late notice, finding the extra money for this budget year was impossible. Although he didn't have the exact costs of ordering 12 films, Gutoskey estimated the figure at somewhere near $7,000.

"With UMES pulling out, that's 50 percent of the funding gone," said

Gutoskey. An attempt was made to order fewer films, however, a new company did not want to agree to a smaller contract. Also, the price per movie was higher with a smaller order than the traditionally larger one for UMES and SSU.

Eric Meyers, producer of Marker Madness, said that the station has been receiving many complaints about the absence of the films. However, Gutoskey said that he had received only one phone call so far and the student was very understanding when the situation was explained.

Gutoskey also added that funding in the budget for movies comes from a variety of sources, such as Conference Services and other auxiliary funds, and unfortunately, student fees for room and board do not pay for films on SSU-TV.

Students can expect to see a question about the desire for bringing movies back to channel 12 on the Quality of Residence Life Survey, issued at the end of the year.

Gutoskey said he hopes to measure student response and if there is not a strong demand for movies, perhaps the money could be used for another project.

SSU-TV encourages students who want to see movies brought back to channel 12 to contact the Housing and Residence Life Office, either by telephone or writing a letter.

Increased funding by the state for USM appears likely

Hugh Bouchelle
Flyer Staff Writer

Early indications are that the 4.2 percent increase in funding requested from the state by the Board of Regents of the University System of Maryland (USM) will be approved.

Recently the Board of Regents announced a four percent increase in tuition for the ten USM institutions. This figure was down from the original seven percent proposal, with the shortfall to be funded by appropriations from the Maryland General Assembly. Full approval will not be complete until next year's regular session.

Delegate Nancy Kopp, Chair of the Education and Economic Development Subcommittee for the state said she felt the requested increase would be approved. "The House Appropriations Committee has a record of supporting funding, so I would assume yes. I certainly support it," said Kopp.

Associate Vice Chancellor for State Relations of USM, Frank Komenda had a similar opinion. He said it is reasonable to expect the Governor to fund as much of the request as is affordable. He stated that last year less than one percent was cut from the budget.

Komenda tempered his optimism however, stating, "We can't realistically expect 100 percent approval." He said it was possible that the Governor's financial advisors and perhaps the legislature may shave a little off.

Komenda also stated that he felt, "The Governor wants to support this funding."

The Regents approved budget request is now before Governor Parris Glendening's financial advisors who are preparing next year's budget to present to Glendening by Nov. 20. The Governor must then present his proposed budget to the legislature in January. The legislature has no power to add to the budget but can cut funds on a line item basis.

Although the committee working on the Governor's budget were unavailable for comment, the Governor has a history of supporting programs for higher education.

Governor Glendening was instrumental in the approval of the Prepaid tuition program. He also introduced the Hope Scholarship program, although it was defeated in last year's legislature. The scholarship program was designed to provide free tuition to high school students seeking to attend college who had a grade point average of "B" or higher.

Since 1990, funding for the USM from state funds has dropped from 45 percent to 30 percent. USM has made up for these short falls through increased tuition and an 11 percent increase in grants and gifts.

According to a September article in The Washington Post, Maryland in fiscal year 1998 has a $634 million surplus. The same article stated that with this surplus Maryland wanted to place a new emphasis on higher education in the state.

Many legislators and educators seem to feel that with the current robust economic health of Maryland, now may be the time to reverse the trend of decreased state funding for higher education.

Students flock to on-campus pub

Even with the minor problems, students stayed late into the night. An estimated 200 students were still at the Crossroads at 1:30 a.m.

Junior Jason Pfirmman, an employee of the pub, said, "The crowd was three times more than anyone expected." He added that while students consumed a total of 13 kegs of beer during the evening, the reason many students stayed for so long is because there are no dance clubs in Salisbury and that students who are not yet 21 have no other place to go.

Hopes are high that the Crossroads will continue to attract similar crowds and provide a viable alternative for SSU students looking to have a good time.

Faculty advisors awarded for dedication

Brent Bozman
Flyer Staff Writer

Three SSU professors were recently recognized for excellence in the field of student advising for the 1996/97 academic year.

Assistant Professor of History Dr. Jeanne Whitney, Assistant Professor of Biology Dr. Elichia Venso, and Assistant Professor of Social Work Robert Long were recipients of the Outstanding Advisor Awards for the past year.

Long said that he tried to be available to advisees and help them formulate a plan. In addition, he said that his 20 years of experience at SSU allows him to share knowledge about the workings of a complicated work environment such as a university.

"I try to let people know all of their options. They may not like all of these options, but it's important to let them know," Long said.

Whitney said that she gives personal attention to each advisee and tries to schedule time for advisees before or after advising week. Whitney also helps students incorporate their personal interests into their class schedule and maintain a well rounded schedule.

"I try to help a student create a plan, not just over the next semester but over the long term," said Whitney.

The award selection process was directed by Special Academic Programs Director Sandra Cohea-Weible. Students nominated advisors for the awards through forms distributed to residence halls, e-mail and student organization boxes. The nomination forms contained questions on a 1 to 10 scale rating an advisor on such qualities as their availability, ability to listen and amount of information and advice. In addition, students answered an essay question asking "what qualifies an advisor as outstanding."

The award selection committee, consisting of two faculty members and the advising services coordinators from the Fulton, Henson and Seidel schools, chose from about 150 student nominations. Faculty nominees were then asked to fill out forms describing how they improved their advising. From these nominees, one Outstanding Advisor Award winner and three Certificate of Merit winners were chosen from each SSU school.

Receiving the Certificate of Merit were Dr. Pat Richards, Dr. Nancy Michelson, and Dr. Keith Connors from the Seidel School of Education and Professional Studies; Dr. Lee May, Dr. Herbert Chew, and Dr. Augustine Di Gionvanna from the Henson School of Science and Technology; and Dr. Anthony Curtis, Dr. Natalie Hopson, and Dr. Ray Thompson of the Fulton School of Liberal Arts.

Nike targeted in international human-rights protests

National Student News Service

On Oct. 18, human rights activists staged "International Nike Day Protest" demonstrations on campuses in 27 U.S. cities and around the world to publicly accuse the Nike Corporation of knowingly allowing its overseas subcontractors to use child labor and operate sweatshop-style factories, among numerous other allegations.

Nike flatly denies any deliberate abuses and accuses critics of ignoring its leadership role in the fight against labor mistreatment at its foreign factories.

"This is an organized, well funded and coordinated attack on one company, Nike, not because our practices are bad, but because we make a visible target," say Nike representatives.

Nike points at its own Code of Conduct, created in 1992 to counter international complaints about conditions in Nike factories overseas, as evidence of its commitment to improving working conditions wherever it subcontracts. Nike says it has "zero tolerance for child labor."

Trim Bissel, coordinator for the Washington based Campaign for Labor Rights, says the International Nike Day of Protest also highlights Nike's domestic exploitation of sports teams and stars, especially at the college level. "College teams have become walking billboards for a company synonymous with the exploitation of young female workers in subcontractors' factories," said Bissel.

"The typical woman in a Nike factory," according to Nike's website (nikeworkers.com), "is 19-20 years old, wears neat jeans and a pressed T-shirt to work, has jewelry and probably shares a T.V. or radio with her roommates." The

Credit cards prey on students

CREDIT, from front page process credit card companies use for other applicants," Danielson said.

Angered by credit card companies' aggressive marketing tactics, several colleges have taken steps to ban credit cards from their campuses.

Dr. Richard Weatherspoon, vice president of student development at John Jay College in New York, placed an extensive ban on credit card advertising on campus. The ban at John Jay College prohibits not only the display tables set up by credit card companies but also credit card inserts in textbooks sold at the campus bookstore.

"Many students at John Jay have had to drop out of school because of the debt they accumulated on their credit cards," said Weatherspoon. "It's really a national problem. It's not that I am against students having a credit card but credit card companies have simply become too aggressive in targeting students," he said.

Weatherspoon hopes to see new legislation introduced in New York to ban credit card advertising at all New York campuses.

Student governments at the University of Wisconsin at Madison and Metropolitan State in Colorado are considering campaigns to ban credit card advertising on their campuses.

"You can't go anywhere on campus anymore without being asked to sign up for a credit card," said Stacey Hafner, student government chair at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. "Many students cannot even finance their student loans, much less a credit card. Credit card companies have no conscience about burying students in debt," she continued.

Credit card companies have started to offer booklets on fiscal responsibility to student card holder, but opponents say this is small consolation for the thousands of students already deeply indebted to credit card companies.

Students lobby Congress to increase financial aid

National Student News Service

As the Senate and House Conference committee wraps up negotiations on the final spending levels for student-aid programs for fiscal year 1998, students are stepping up lobbying efforts to secure additional grant program funding.

Across the country, campuses have been collecting postcards and participating in lobby days to secure additional funding for grant-based aid programs.

"Financial aid is up from last year but mostly in the form of loans and loans only increase student indebtedness," said Andrew Hayden, the Federal Affairs director for the University of Arizona Student Government.

Hayden, who just returned from a lobby day in Washington, D.C., said that saving the State Student Incentive Grant (SSIG) program will be one of the focuses of student lobbying in the coming weeks.

The SSIG program, which provides matching funds to states for need-based aid to students, received $35 million in the Senate but nothing in the House. The program will be discontinued if the House does not provide funding.

"If the money is not allocated for the SSIG program, Arizona will probably not continue it," said Hayden. "Many students will be forced to either take out more loans, work longer hours or quit school."

Funding for the SSIG program is not the only discrepancy between the House and Senate versions of the appropriations bill. The House of Representatives allocated an additional $500 million dollars to the Pell Grant program making Pell Grants more accessible to financially independent students. The additional money was not allocated in the Senate.

"Many students won't receive any real benefits from the recently-approved tax credits and these students will also be unable to receive a Pell Grant if this money is not appropriated," said Justin DalMoin, Student Government president at the University of Pittsburgh.

University of Pittsburgh students recently sent 700 postcards to Senator Arlen Specter (R-PA), a key member of the Conference committee.

According to Hillary Goldmann, director of Federal Relations at the American Association of Colleges and Universities (AASCU), there have been discussions among conferees to allocate the additional $500 million to expand Pell grant eligibility, but not to make the money available until the 1999-2000 academic year.

Student-aid advocates say this is unacceptable. "We need the money now," said Goldman. "Congress can't claim victory for students if the money isn't going to be there until next year."

The final version of the appropriations bill is expected in early November. Students are urged to call their Senators and Representatives and pressure them to allocate money for the SSIG program and to include the extra money to expand Pell Grant eligibility.

Stock market worth the roller coaster ride

Wall Street shook, rattled and rolled last week as the market moved from a record drop, losing 550 points in one day to an unprecedented high the very next day, with a billion plus shares being traded. The newspapers were full of pictures of traders either frustrated, head in hands or merely astonished, mouths agape as they stared at the board. The tremor that started in the overseas markets roiled America to be sure, but should the average investor be heading for shelter?

The majority of today's investors are middle class Americans who are using the market as a means of gaining long-term leverage in an economy where banks no longer provide a meaningful return. People are turning increasingly to mutual funds, money market accounts and T-bills for slow, but steady growth, in accounts that are used for college tuition, weddings, new babies and retirement.

Of course there are Gordon Gekkos out there, manipulating the market for quick returns and easy money, moving large sums of cash from one hot technology stock to the next, barely stopping to take a breath. CRASH. These are the guys the traders in the pit are always on the cell phone with, ordering the sort of last minute trades that would make middle class America's head spin.

And this type of "investor"-although this term isn't even fairly applied here- did lose last week. But the rest of the market, the true investors who create its base, didn't really lose much.

In a typical mutual fund portfolio there may be one or two risky stocks; last week's drop will probably be reflected in a lower percentage gain overall for stocks of this nature. But the bulk of the fund package consists of solid long-term winner, chosen specifically because of their ability to withstand short-term highs and lows.

Therein lies the real lesson about last week's events on Wall Street. For those seeking instant gratification, the market can be your best friend and your worst enemy. For those with an eye to the future and the patience to let their money grow, the market is the only show in town.

To the Editor:

A stated administrative goal for SSU is "national eminence," but so far no one has explained to me exactly what that means and how it may be achieved. I do know what "eminence" means, however, and I believe I witnessed it when I saw Dr. Paul Pfeiffer playing Antonio Salieri in the SSU production of Peter Shaffer's Amadeus, directed by Richard Culver. A colleague who has been here 27 years told me that this was the best acting performance he had ever seen locally, and he may be right. While constantly having to shift between playing a vain younger composer intent on ruining Mozart's career and a crazed older one made corrosively evil by jealousy, Pfeiffer was on stage for nearly three and a half hours, a marathon performance that would tax the resources of any actor. Happily, he was up to the challenge.

Next term we hope to organize another academic trip to Romania, a country famous for its innovative theater. I would urge the President, Provost and Dean of the Fulton School to send Dr. Pfeiffer to Romania next spring to perform vignettes of his Salieri for the theater faculty there, in order to demonstrate the quality of our program here. Eminence can only be demonstrated by achievement of the highest order, and Paul Pfeiffer, an actor at the peak of his form, would make an outstanding cultural delegate. Talent of this order deserves a wider audience.

Meanwhile, I am grateful to Richard Culver, Gerry Patt and a remarkable student cast for enabling this production of Amadeus to take place.

How to plan for a career (or at least find a decent job)

Andrea Brown-Hurley
Flyer Staff Writer

“What do you want to be when you grow up?” If you have even a vague idea of the answer to this popular question, but break out in a sweat, develop a tension headache or become filled with a sense of foreboding when asked for your plan of attack, read on, and know that you are not alone.

Planning for career development can be a daunting, confusing and stressful endeavor. Fortunately, there are formulas for organizing your job hunting strategies, and services available to support your search. Thoughtful, thorough preparation and a systematic job search will help you find a job while saving your sanity.

Assess Yourself

Whoa! They say the first step is the hardest, and in this case, they may be right. Self-assessment is a tricky process which transcends the introspection exhausted on the search for answers to questions like, “What do I want to do.” Self-discovery is a dynamic process which probes for answers to questions like, “Who am I.” It is a journey which might endure a lifetime. But there are pamphlets, periodicals and programs devoted to helping you gain insight into your strengths, interests and values.

This insight is a flashlight's beam on a dark and dangerous path. It illuminates the way, guiding you in the right direction. A National Association of Colleges and Employers' article about planning job choices stated that finding the overlap among your strengths, interests and values will provide direction. Likewise, matching those findings with an appropriate career will narrow the focus of your job search.

Be honest. Identify your strengths. Examine your interests. Pinpoint your values. Criticize yourself constructively by looking over reference letters, getting feedback from employers and analyzing what aspects of your work style have made you successful or unsuccessful. Similarly, critique past jobs and career-related experiences, noting advantages and disadvantages in each situation. This sort of evaluation will clarify your objectives for career development.

Develop a Resume. Begin in the senior resume book at the basics of grammar. Check for errors. Check again. And then, get someone else to proof your resume.

The staff at the Center for Personal and Professional Development, which is located in the Guerrieri University Center where the Book Rack used to be, offers a resume review service free of charge to students and alumni. Just drop off your resume at the front desk, wait 2 to 3 days, and pick it up. Staff members are available to discuss with you any suggestions for improvement which might be noted on your document. Then, make the changes you feel are necessary to polish your resume.

Finally, boost your chances of landing a job by placing your document placement center. Emery said that employers hunt for personnel in person, by fax and over the telephone.

Open a Credential File

Like the senior resume book, a credential file makes applicant data easily accessible to employers. The file is a tidy package filled with your credentials: resume, transcripts (which must come from the registrar's office), reference letters (forms provided) and more specific major information such as National Teachers Exam scores and student teaching evaluations. Emery said that seniors and second-semester juniors should open a credential file. She stated that an established file is ready to send to potential employers.

To open a credential file, drop by the front desk at the center and state your purpose. You don't need an appointment. You will be given a file packet and directed to a table with a tape player and headphones. Simply listen to the instructional tape and follow the directions. Within 10 minutes, you will have opened your credential file. It is an easy process that will save you time and money during your job search.

Educate Yourself

This step involves brushing up on interviewing and other interpersonal skills and familiarizing yourself with the job market. It is an integral aspect of successful career development, and it should begin before your active job search and continue throughout your professional life.

Resources abound for honing job-hunting skills and researching the job market. The Internet offers sites like Jobsmart (<http://www.jobsmart.org/tools/career/spec-car.htm>) and Occupational Outlook Handbook (<http://stats.bls.gov/ocohome.htm>), which explore employment options. Similarly, newspaper business sections, consumer reports and countless trade magazines provide informational and comparative company information. Emery commented that the placement center subscribes to various trade magazines, which list job openings in addition to providing information.

Continue your education by taking advantage of classes and workshops offered at the university. Make time to attend the placement center's interviewing, resume writing and networking workshops, each of which are offered on 4 or 5 different dates through April. Keep abreast of special events like the etiquette dinners in November and April, the relocation seminars in December and March and the job fair strategy session in February.

If you're looking for elective credits, check out some of the practical courses in the communication arts department's curriculum. Classes such as Interviewing, Small Group Discussion and Communication and Culture will help prepare you for the active job search. To gain a deeper understanding of a field of interest, apply for an internship.

Paul E. Scovell, chair of the communication arts department, said that while classroom instruction provides basic skills, it cannot be a true world model. An internship, Scovell said, “gives the student of realistic view of what it's like.” He said that although the internship is a training ground, it does not guarantee future employment with the host company.

Network, Network, Network

Besides its function as an educational tool, the internship serves as a vehicle for networking. Webster's Dictionary defines networking as, “the act or process of informally sharing information and support, especially among members of a professional group.” Commonly misconstrued as “schmoozing,” networking is actually establishing and maintaining relationships with individuals who you might help or benefit from to obtain a desired end result, like finding a job. Emery said that networking is “using people you know in a good and positive way.”

Internships are great places to meet contacts, but other sources like professional organizations, volunteer work, annual trade meetings and professional journals also provide networking opportunities. Allen N. Smith, assistant professor of communication arts, said that job seekers might attend professional meetings, compile a list of contacts, and

a weekly look at SSU's international community

Jennifer Martin
Flyer Staff Writer

Elizabeth Mziray is from Tanzania, a country on the eastern coast of Africa. “A lot of people think that we go around naked, killing animals and running through the bush, but that's not what life's like in Tanzania.” As a matter of fact, life in Tanzania isn't as uncivilized and primitive as some people believe. Mziray is proof that it is quite modern and fun.

Throughout her life in Tanzania, Mziray has experienced a lot of American culture. Though her native language is Swahili, she has also spoken English all her life. “We went to English schools as children, so I've never had a problem with it,” she said. Mziray also listened to American music and attended American films. “It's basically the same, but we get the movies a little bit later. They just aren't as current,” she added.

Upon her high school graduation in 1994, Mziray wanted to study in the states just as her mother had done. She also really wanted to experience the American culture that she had a small taste of in Tanzania.

Through a family friend who attended SSU, her dream came true. With high hopes, Mziray arrived here in January 1995. “I thought that everything was going to be big and new. When I thought of America I thought of big cities and skyscrapers. Salisbury has proven me wrong,” she said.

Mziray has enjoyed her time here and is currently majoring in biology. Along with studying and enjoying some favorite hobbies such as reading and cooking, Mziray is the Vice President of the International Students Association. The association helps arrange different programs for the students to enjoy. “We set up dinners and plan trips for the students to take. This year we hope to volunteer at the local Christian shelter,” Mziray said.

Although she has become accustomed to many American bigger. They just don't taste the same,” she explained.

She also mentioned that in Tanzania it is unusual for someone her age to have a job. “I was surprised to see many young adults working and going to school. Back home we depend on our parents more.”

Even though Mziray has settled into American life quite well over the traditions, there are a few things that she still can't get use to. American television is one of them. “We get a few programs back home, but nothing like what you find here,” said Mziray.

Mziray finds daytime television particularly strange. “I can't believe that people just get up in front of the camera and talk about their lives on national television,” she said. Mziray still finds American chicken and meat different, too. “Here, they pump up the chickens with hormones to make them past two years, she misses her family back home very much. “My mother has been here twice to visit me and I have gone home twice.” However, that still hasn't thwarted her feelings of homesickness. She writes to them frequently because phoning them is too expensive. “I just hate writing sometimes because it takes too long to get there,” she complained.

Mziray plans to graduate in two years and then go to medical school somewhere in the U.S. She mentions that it is particularly hard for international students to go to medical school in the U.S. However, she plans to get good grades, apply and hope for the best. She states that the best thing about American school is the “opportunity to take a variety of classes. I've learned so much and I don't want it to end.”

Mziray expresses how much she'll miss washers, dryers and microwaves when she returns to Tanzania. “Not everyone has them back home. They just make life much easier.”

Yet, she won't miss Salisbury's night life. She feels the same as many other students and hates the fact that the bars close so early. “At home we sometimes stay out dancing until six in the morning.”

Mziray describes herself as open-minded. She enjoys new experiences and can't wait to continue her travels. Although, she does find one distinct difference between American culture compared to others. “Americans are ignorant toward foreigners and other lifestyles. They're just afraid to learn about other people besides themselves. It's not their fault though.”

Mziray finds it funny that she constantly informs people that the Safari animals of Tanzania aren't just walking down the street. “People think they just roam around and stampede through the cities, but we have special sanctuaries for them which allows people to visit. I just get a kick out of that idea.” Mziray hopes that soon American culture will be as open-minded about foreigners as she is. “One day, they'll want to learn more and maybe come to my beautiful country.”

write “cold letters asking for advice.” Similarly, he said that from professional journals, they might acquire names and write letters requesting an audience.

Emery said that the key to networking is persistence. Keep attending trade meetings, reading professional journals and writing cold letters. Jim Leahy, chairman and CEO of Specialty Cable Corporation, wrote that he gets letters from prospective employees all the time, but the ones he responds to are those who “pick up that phone and follow through.” Be persistent.

Seek Employment

Networking is but one way of actively seeking a job. Other methods like newspaper classified ads, employment agencies and Internet job sites play an important role in finding employment. While temp agencies, headhunters and newspaper ads work toward the same goal, the Internet is quickly becoming the method of choice for many job hunters. According to Malcolm Fitch, staff writer at Money magazine, the Internet will attract 4.5 million job seekers this year.

In his article, “Cruise the Web to land the job of your dreams,” Fitch writes that job hunters use the Internet because of its extensive job listings, and because a “few quick clicks of the mouse can instantly e-mail cover letters and resumes to your prospective employers.”

Fitch suggests checking out these three sites first: Online Career Center (<http://www.occ.com>); Monster Board (www.monster.com); and E-Span (www.com). All three sites update listings daily and are easy to navigate.

Spotlight on Phillip Lebel

Emily Argo
Flyer Staff Writer

Each week in Spotlight, Emily Argo ventures out into SSU's hallowed halls of academia in search of professorial profiles.

This week the spotlight shines on Phillip Lebel, visiting chair of economics and finance, who has spent much of his career focusing on the economics of Africa.

Lebel's lifelong work with African nations began in the late 1960s when he joined the Peace Corps. He was sent to Ethiopia for four years to teach geography and history to students. The village in which he lived had 2,000 residents, no running water and was seven rivers from the nearest road. Lebel said, "I think my experience in the Peace Corps was one of the most memorable experiences of my life."

Lebel has traveled to 30 African countries. His office contains a map of the continent covered with pushpins documenting all of the places he has visited. He has been down the Congo River and has climbed Mt. Kilimanjaro. Because Lebel is fluent in French, he has done a great deal of work with French-speaking African nations. Lebel said, "I have always found an extraordinary amount of hospitality in the countries I have visited."

Lebel said, "For people who do not follow events in Africa, there is a lot of confusion about what is going on in Africa. There are many positive things going on in Africa despite the negative publicity of events that have unfolded there." Lebel said, African countries, like Ghana, have been struggling to put together economic reform and to promote economic growth.

To create more awareness of African affairs, Lebel founded the Center for Economic Research on Africa at Montclair State University in

Lebel is teaching at SSU for the first time this semester but the experience is very much a homecoming. Lebel's mother was a member of the SSU class of 1936. Lebel grew up in Salisbury and attended Wicomico High School. He then attended Washington College in Chestertown, Md., where he 1987. Lebel said, "I wanted to create a forum for policy making institutions to discuss and correct misconceptions about Africa, particularly about economic issues." He modestly stated his belief that the center has brought about more understanding of the economics of African nations. He also has been doing some consultant work about energy conservation and structural adjustment in Africa.

In June, Lebel traveled to another part of the world, Beijing, China. He was a co-sponsor of a conference about the opportunities and challenges of international business with China.

earned a bachelor degree in economics. He received his Masters and doctorate degrees in economics at Boston University.

Lebel came to SSU from Montclair State University in New Jersey. He spent the last three years there as the dean of the business school. During his career at Montclair, Lebel was a Fulbright professor at the University of Dakar, Senegal. He taught graduate courses in different academic departments and conducted research on agricultural and resource management issues while in Senegal.

Lebel is teaching two sections of Principles of Microeconomics. As visiting chair, he helps create schedules, works with faculty, oversees the process of curriculum revision and develops ties with community businesses.

Lebel said he came to SSU, in part, to help the business school recruit personnel. He said there was a lot of personnel turnover last year, resulting in three vacancies in the department. Lebel said, "I am pleased to be here and I am having a delightful time. I am enjoying working with students, the dean, the department and other divisions." He said he is enjoying working in a business school with accreditation. The Perdue School is accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business.

Lebel said, "It's fun to be back on the Eastern Shore. I like the environment." He enjoys being able to pursue his hobbies of boating and sailing. He keeps his 22-foot Catalina sailboat in the Nanticoke River. He also owns a smaller sailboat and another boat with an outboard motor. He remarked, "I have a small navy."

In addition to nautical activities, Lebel enjoys reading and spending time with his two daughters. He also has a very strong interest in environmental issues. Lebel said, "I feel there is a merging between my recreational activities and what I am doing professionally." He is presently researching economics of sustainable growth and biodiversity.

Lebel's long term goal is to continue his professional development and to pursue areas of his interest. "I hope I can help the school strengthen ties with local businesses and increase the quality of the department and the school," Lebel said.

Be loud. Get noticed.

SSU-TV's new season boasts quality programming

Heather Crutchfield
Flyer Staff Writer

The new season on SSU-TV campus channel 12 is certainly something to tune-in. All new student produced programming and specials make up this semester's roster, with a few old favorites along the way.

This is not a story about why there are no movies on channel 12 anymore, though it is an issue that should be addressed. Paul Stenzel, general manager of SSU-TV, can sum the absence of this sorely missed attraction up in one word — funding. He advises those of you who want your movies back to approach your Resident Assistant, since campus movies were formally paid for by Housing and Residence Life.

Instead, this is a story about the variety of shows being aired on SSU-TV this semester and how you can get involved. "There are a couple of new shows that look promising," Stenzel said, "Students are showing enthusiasm at working on shows."

One new show that has begun airing on campus cable is Off Tha' Hook, produced by Nakhiah Baskerville and Jamal Montgomery. Off Tha' Hook features music, sports and news information from campus sources aimed at students interested in campus life.

Another new addition to the programming schedule is Rough Copy, a broadcast news show that airs stories concerning campus events, news and sports as well as a movie review, editorial and a concert calendar for local and D.C. area concerts. Rough Copy is a product of the Broadcast Journalism class taught by Francis Kendall and presents a collaborative effort on the part of students enrolled in the class.

Special programming, such as V8 and other campus events, is also that features three, athletically conscious men, discussing the past week's events in an off the cuff manner.

Late night talk show host, Jeremiah Wilke returns to SSU-TV with his show, Getting Sleepy with Jeremiah.

being aired this semester to give students a chance to see events they might have been unable to attend.

The final new addition to the schedule this semester is Talkin' Sports, an informative review of sporting events this year to guide student teams in a duel of wits and artistic mayhem as team representatives draw clues on the board and their teammates try to guess what is being drawn. Challenging clues, divided into categories such as "Movies," "Famous People" and "Shots," are devised by producer Eric Meyers. "If you haven't been on television with Matt Peek," Meyers said, "you haven't lived."

Both Marker Madness and Getting Sleepy with Jeremiah are constantly in search of contestants, crew members and guests. Marker Madness tapes from 3 p.m. - 5 p.m. on Tuesdays and Getting Sleepy tapes on Mondays from 3 p.m. - 5 p.m. Interested students are encouraged to stop by the station, Caruthers Hall 176, to sign up.

Program proposals are also being accepted for upcoming semesters. If you would like to produce a program, fill out a proposal sheet from studio's bulletin board.

Meyers explained that producing a show is a great opportunity. "It enhances my career portfolio and I get to meet new and interesting people," he said.

The future of SSU-TV looks bright with the possibility of reaching the community on Cable Access channel 33. Other future improvements on the horizon for the student run station include the ability to run four movies a day instead of two (pending funding), the posting of a daily scheduling grid on channel 12 during non-programming hours and improved graphics.

SSU-TV is also selling copies of the Eighth Annual Variety Show to interested students for $7. Students can request a copy by leaving a message on the SSU-TV answering machine at 546-3306.

SSU goalie senior Kristin Archer had a record breaking day as she recorded her 13th shutout of the season, breaking SSU's single season record. "I couldn't have done it without the team in front of me," said Archer who had 10 saves on the day. "It's not my record rather it's our team's record."

Capital Athletic Conference (CAC). The Sea Gulls overwhelmed the Eagles with a 3-0 shutout on Saturday en route to their third consecutive CAC title.

"It's a great accomplishment for this team," said SSU head coach Dawn Chamberlin. "For the seniors it's their third in a row. They have just done a wonderful job. I couldn't be more proud of them."

The Sea Gulls got on the scoreboard halfway through the first half when senior Laura Getty found the back of the Eagles' cage to give SSU the 1-0 lead. The Sea Gull attack wouldn't stop there as junior Megan Hopper scored her first of two goals on the day with only 45 seconds left before halftime.

SSU would put the game out of reach in the second half when Hopper scored her second unassisted goal at the 18:31 mark. Hopper had MWC's goalie Heather Carter one-on-one as she went to the left side of the goal and fired the ball with a backhand shot. "Her last goal was phenomenal," Chamberlin said.

"I think they [SSU] had a lot of momentum coming into the game. I don't know what the problem was but we played them hard. We wish them the best of luck heading into the national tournament," said MWC head coach Dana Hall in her eighth year at the helm.

SSU held the advantage in shots on goal, 22-11. The Sea Gulls also recorded eight corners, double the amount the Eagles had. SSU's record improves to 16-2 while the Eagles' season ends with a 11-10 record.

"This [third straight CAC title] says something about Salisbury State field hockey. We have been dominating the conference and we are not going to let down," Chamberlin said.

NOTES: The victory was SSU's 12th in a row... The Sea Gulls advanced to the finals with a 3-0 victory over Catholic last Thursday... SSU was a perfect 7-0 in CAC games this year... Archer recorded shutouts against every CAC opponent... Hopper's two goals gives her a team and conference leading 18 goals... Getty's goal was her 14th of the year... Selection for the NCAA tournament was yesterday. Results unavailable at press time. In all likelihood the Sea Gulls will be hosting one of the four regionals this weekend.

SSU football program looking to recapture lost glory

Paul Krome
Flyer Sports Writer

Ralph Murray, Delmarva Shorebirds director of community relations, sits at his desk inside Arthur W. Perdue Stadium thumbing through the pages of the 1985 Salisbury State College (SSC) football media guide. It's one of the many pieces of memorabilia Murray, a 1964 graduate of what was then SSC and a lifelong resident of Salisbury, has saved over the dozen or so years he's been an avid follower of Salisbury State football.

On the cover, two of the most important figures in the 25-year history of Sea Gull football, the late Mike McGlinchey and All-American quarterback Robb Disbennett, pose in front of an airplane. The words "come fly with us" stream across the top of the cover.

The Sea Gulls were indeed flying back then. Coach McGlinchey and Disbennett had led the program to its glory days, a four-year stretch in the mid-1980s during which Salisbury State made three trips to the NCAA Tournament. The ride culminated with a 1986 trip to the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl, the Division III National Championship Game. And though the Gulls lost to Augustana (Ill.) College, the message was clear: Salisbury State football had arrived on the national scene.

But times have changed. After suffering just one losing season in its first 17, the program has managed just one winning campaign in its last eight. McGlinchey departed after the run at the national title, and three years of poor recruiting by the succeeding staff led to disinterest in SSU among the Maryland high school ranks. As numbers declined and the academic direction of the University became apparent, the program struggled to find itself in a clearly turbulent atmosphere.

Enter Joe Rotellini, who as an assistant coach helped guide the Sea Gulls to their playoff appearances in '85 and '86. Rotellini replaced Joe Dailey as head coach in the spring of 1990, inheriting a program that had taken a turn for the worse since his departure. Now in his eighth year at the helm, he guides a team on which 30 players have a grade point average of 3.0 or higher.

As SSU, which obtained university status in 1988, enters its second quarter-century of football, it has become clear that issues off the field represent challenges equal to or greater than those of opponents on the field. Academics, scheduling and a changing football environment all play a part as the Sea Gulls seek to recapture the glory they enjoyed in the '80s, when Sea Gull Stadium was the place to be on Saturday afternoons in the fall. Today The Flyer begins a three-part series on SSU football—where it's been, and where it's going.

First Steps

SSC President Norman C. Crawford, Jr., made the official announcement on Nov. 21, 1971—the following year, the College would field a football team for the first time ever. The decision to add football to the intercollegiate athletics program was not exactly met with unanimous enthusiasm. An informal survey in the February 1972 edition of The S.S.C. Informer, the campus newspaper, revealed that almost 42 percent of students and faculty polled opposed making football the ninth varsity sport offered for men.

Nevertheless, in mid-August head coach Richard Yobst and his staff welcomed over 80 players to tryouts for the first ever Sea Gull football team. Among the assistant coaches was McGlinchey, a three-sport star and 1967 graduate of the University of Delaware. The Sea Gulls played a six-game junior varsity schedule in their initial season, finishing with a 4-2 record that included a 31-0 shutout of Towson in their inaugural game on Sept. 29. They played their home games at Wicomico County Stadium in Salisbury.

top 10 votes. Only in 1981, the team's first season at Sea Gull Stadium, did Salisbury suffer a losing mark, a 2-7 campaign that marked the last for coach Bill Yeagle. Through its first 10 years, Salisbury State football had emerged as a winning program with a bright future.

National Arrival

Mike McGlinchey had been with SSC football since its birth. As an assistant coach he spent those 10 years instilling a positive attitude and achievement-oriented philosophy into the program. So it came as no surprise to some that upon his promotion to head coach prior to the 1982 season, he set his sights on the national championship. Disbennett, whom McGlinchey lured away from a baseball career at Towson, remembered that few took him seriously.

McGlinchey named freshman Disbennett, who did not play football during his two years at Prince George's Community College, his starting quarterback. The Gulls faced their first national test in the season finale

From that point on, Salisbury State wasted no time in establishing itself on the college football scene. Playing a varsity schedule the following season, the Gulls posted a 7-2 record, best among any football-playing college in Maryland. Freshmen running backs Levi Shade and Jim Watson helped Salisbury lead the National Association of Independent Athletics (NAIA) in rushing with 2,405 yards gained and a 342 yards per game average. Two years later, Shade and Watson would each rush for over 1,000 yards and become the first of eight All-Americans ever at SSU.

In 1976, the Gulls accepted an invitation to the Coco Bowl in December in San Juan, Puerto Rico. With funds raised by the Sea Gull Club, an athletics support organization formed during these early years of Salisbury football, the Sea Gulls made the trip south and concluded their third seven-win season with a 61-0 shutout of Inter-American University.

Yobst resigned in 1979 to return to his full-time position as assistant dean of student affairs. But the wins did not stop, as that year the Sea Gulls received their first ever national at defending national champion University of Dayton (Ohio), a game Disbennett calls one of the program's most defining moments. The Flyers won 28-0.

"The score was not indicative of the game. We hung with them physically and in terms of talent. We just killed ourselves with execution mistakes," he says. "But inside we knew we could do it. And that game set the tone for the off-season."

In 1983, McGlinchey and the Sea Gulls raced through the regular season with a 9-0-1 record, earning a spot in the eight-team NCAA Tournament for the first time in school history by beating nationally ranked Widener (Pa.) University 23-7 in the last game of the regular season. In the quarterfinals at Carnegie Mellon (Pa.) University, Disbennett completed a still-standing NCAA record 90 percent (18 of 20) of his passes and threw for two touchdowns in the Gulls' 16-14 win. The victory set the stage for a semifinal showdown with Union (N.Y.) College in the first home playoff game ever.

Gulls pound Seahawks in CAC semifinals

Brian Burden
Flyer Sports Writer

All season long SSU women's soccer coach Jim Berkman has been hoping his team would reach the potential it presented on paper. Berkman got a taste of this when his squad routed the St. Mary's College Seahawks 4-1 last Wednesday. The victory took place on the intramural fields of SSU under the lights in the Capital Athletic Conference (CAC) tournament semifinals.

"We really showed what we're made of tonight. The last time we played St. Mary's in the regular season, the game could have gone either way. This time there was no doubt," Berkman said.

The team was coming off a somewhat lackadaisical 3-0 victory over Marymount University in a CAC tournament quarterfinal game on Monday. The Sea Gulls were in postseason form, making consistent passes and scoring goals that would not have gone in earlier in the season.

"We've been unlucky all season. It's about time some of the goals went our way," Berkman said.

The Sea Gulls scored three goals in a 15 minute stretch in the second part of the first half that ended the game before it ever really began. Sophomore forward Cortney Urban tallied the first goal off of a lob from sister Danielle with just under 20 minutes remaining in the first half. Cortney emerged from a pack of Seahawk defenders and tapped the ball into an open net.

Not wanting to be out done, Danielle decided to score a goal of her own 10 minutes later. Sophomore defender Jennifer Mazzola tallied the first of her two assists in the game when she fed Danielle Urban a beautiful lead pass that placed her in front of Seahawk goalie Valerie Taylor. Taylor had no chance as Danielle Urban whistled the shot by her.

"We had a set game plan that we followed real well tonight," Berkman said. "Basically, we wanted to counter attack as fast as we could so as to keep

Senior Patty Jones dribbles by a St. Mary's defender in last Thursday's CAC semifinals.

St. Mary's off balance as much as possible."

Salisbury didn't have to counter attack that much as they were in the offensive end for the entire first half. Danielle Urban, SSU's all-time leading scorer, netted her second goal of the half with a header off a Mazzola corner kick. Danielle Urban's five points in the game gives her 101 career goals.

The half didn't end as well as Berkman had hoped. In a rare defensive lapse, the Seahawks were able to break through and Yvonne Hefferman scored off a Christie Valentine cross pass that cut the deficit to two, 3-1.

"That goal kind of shocked me because we were totally dominating," Berkman said. "The girls didn't let it bother them at halftime, so I didn't either."

The SSU defense came out in the second half and showed how strong they were. After Nicole Urban scored on a penalty kick to give the team a 4-1 lead, the team dropped back into a prevent defense.

Freshman goalkeeper Amy Forbes looked strong in the net with three saves. Taylor made six for the Seahawks as they were outshot by the Sea Gulls 14-6. SSU held an advantage in corners as well, 9-1.

The game did have a special underlying meaning to it. The SSU women's soccer program is in the fourth year of its brief history, and this is the first time that seniors have had the chance to play a last home game. Both Danielle and Nicole Urban, along with Katie Watson and Patty Jones gave the Sea Gull fans another strong performance.

"It was a great battle and the seniors led the way. We have accomplished step 2 in our quest, step three comes Saturday. If we play the way we have been playing, and Amy is strong in goal, we've got a great shot at this thing," Berkman said.

NOTES: SSU is now 15-3-1. . . The Sea Gulls are on an 11 game unbeaten streak; their last loss came from the hands of Mary Washington on September 25 . . . The Sea Gulls played the Eagles in the CAC tournament final on Saturday for results see Gull Takes.

right here in Salisbury," says Disbennett, noting that portable bleachers had to be installed to accommodate the crowd. Salisbury lost 23-21 despite scoring twice in the final quarter.

The following year, the Sea Gulls started the season 6-1, including a miraculous 34-33 win at Randolph-Macon (Va.) College where Salisbury tied an NCAA record by rallying from a 33-0 deficit to win. The Gulls earned a number five national ranking in Division III, but a 38-21 loss to Guilford (N.C.) College, an NAIA Division I school, dashed any playoff hopes.

After a season-opening loss in 1985, Salisbury put together nine straight wins that led to a berth in the expanded 16-team NCAA Tournament. The Gulls led the nation in scoring with 39.5 points per game, and the defense, guided by new defensive coordinator Rotellini, finished ninth in the country. Salisbury drew an opening round rematch with Carnegie Mellon, this time on the Eastern Shore. The Gulls advanced 35-22, but at Gettysburg in the quarterfinals, they could muster little offense in a 22-6 loss.

Disbennett earned All-America honors that year, and he remained at Salisbury as a graduate assistant coach in 1986. The Sea Gulls looked to running back Mike Coppa to carry the load, and he promptly set a single season rushing record with 1,812 yards, nearly 700 yards better than any Sea Gull ball carrier. "We've never had a running back like Mike Coppa," says Murray, a member of the Sea Gull Club's executive board. "He was largely responsible for that success. Of course, he was surrounded by a lot of good players, but he could have played at a higher level."

Salisbury captured two wins by a total of three points on the way to a 10-0 regular season. The Gulls advanced on the road in the first two rounds of the playoffs, winning at Emory & Henry (Va.) University and Susquehanna (Pa.) College. Then Coppa rushed for 271 yards and six touchdowns in a monumental 44-40 semifinal upset at second-ranked Ithaca (N.Y.) College, sending the little-known Sea Gulls to the national championship game and spoiling the hopes of Ithaca fans, many of whom already had tickets for a return trip to the Stagg Bowl. "That was the most exciting game I've ever witnessed anywhere at any level," says Murray. "The score just kept going back and forth."

But the ride came to an end in Phenix City, Ala., as the Vikings of Augustana rolled to a 31-3 win and their fourth straight national championship. The season, and an era, had ended, but not before the Sea Gulls earned the Lambert Cup, awarded annually to the top team in the East. McGlinchey left Salisbury to assume the head coaching duties at Central Connecticut State University. After 15 years with SSC, he left his mark as the winningest coach in the program's history.

McGlinchey passed away at his home in Salisbury this March after an eight-year battle with Lou Gehrig's disease.

He was replaced in '87 by Joe Dailey, a Massachusetts native who had spent most of his coaching career in New England. The Sea Gulls stumbled to 2-6-1 in 1989, a record fans had not expected. Dailey resigned after the third year of a four-year contract, citing personal and family reasons.

Part two of this series will look at the Sea Gulls' progress under head coach Joe Rotellini, and how the program has coped with increased academic standards and a lack of in-state rivals on the schedule.

Green Terror shut out Sea Gulls

Westminster, MD — SSU suffered its first shutout loss in four years Saturday with an 11-0 defeat at the hands of Western Maryland College. The Sea Gull offense managed only 87 total yards in the loss, their lowest total of the season.

Mac James gained only 43 yards on 20 carries while freshman quarterback Matt Main completed only 4 of 15 passes for 58 yards.

The loss drops the Sea Gulls record to 2-5 while the Green Terror improved to a perfect 8-0 record. SSU travels to Dover, Delaware this Saturday for the "Route 13 Rivalry" with Wesley.

SSU loses CAC final in overtime

Fredericksburg, VA — Mary Washington College won its third straight Capital Athletic Conference (CAC) women's soccer championship Saturday afternoon with a 1-0 overtime victory over SSU in an exciting marathon game decided by penalty shots.

The game remained scoreless after 90 minutes of regulation play and four 15-minute overtime periods. Playoff games cannot end in a tie, so the game was decided by a shootout. The Eagles scored four goals to SSU's one to secure the victory.

Men's Soccer

Gulls win season finale in overtime

Rocky Mount, NC — Junior forward Brian Doherty scored both of SSU's goals to lead the Gulls past North Carolina Wesleyan 2-1 in Saturday afternoon's regular season finale.

Both of Doherty's goals were scored on penalty kicks, the second coming with just 26 seconds left in overtime.

The win was SSU's fourth straight to end the regular season at 10-7. The Gulls hosted Marymount in the first round of the Capital Athletic Conference tournament yesterday afternoon. Results of the contest were not available at press time.

SSU tops Catholic on senior day

Salisbury — The Sea Gulls won their final regular season home game last Tuesday with a 3-0 victory over Catholic. Senior day for the Gulls was clouded by the absence of Cassie Cutright, out with an off-court injury. Seniors Sandy Palasek and Brooke Salitrik celebrated senior day in style, leading the Gulls to victory 15-7, 15-2 and 15-1.

Sea Gulls sail past Captains, 2-0

Brian Ansel
Flyer Sports Writer

The SSU men's soccer team capped off its final home game of the regular-season against Christopher Newport University (CNU) with a 2-0 shutout last Wednesday. Both teams entered the matchup with identical 8-7 records. "We are almost the same team," said Captains head coach Steve Shaw.

The first half of the game opened very slowly as both teams tried to grasp a feel of each other's game style. Both teams had several opportunities to put the ball in the net in the first half. The missed chances to score in the first half exemplified the strong defensive play from each team. The lackluster first half ended in a 0-0 defensive battle. "We were a little sluggish in the first half," said SSU head coach Gerry DiBartolo.

The second half of the game started out much like the first. The Gulls controlled the ball more and kept the ball down in the Captains' side of the field for much of the second half.

With the game clock at 19:45 SSU junior forward Kevin Rhodes scored off an assist from freshman back Andrew Rogers giving the Gulls a 1-0 advantage. "It might not have gone the way we really wanted it to go in the first half. But after the first goal, that put us over the hill," said Rhodes.

The Captains' defense would feel the pressure of the Sea Gulls offense once more. Junior forward Brian Doherty scored the second goal of the game with 13:10 left to play. Doherty's unassisted shot put the Sea Gulls up by two and sealed the victory. "We climaxed with the second goal and we played very well after that," said Rhodes. "We played great defense and our defensive play shut them out."

"I think this victory was great. The team we played was tremendous," said DiBartolo. "Both teams played very hard schedules throughout the season. It was a game between two very good teams."

The victory improved the Sea Gulls record to 9-7 for the regular season while the Captains drop to an even .500 with a record of 8-8. "We played well and this loss exemplified our season. We have played some good games but we have not been able to get a lot of good results," said Shaw.

SSU played great defense the whole day and received another phenomenal performance by freshman goalkeeper Michael Svehla. Svehla made seven saves en route to his sixth and a half shutout of the year. CNU junior goalkeeper Joseph Pombriant recorded five saves in the losing effort.

The Captains had the advantage in shots on goal with 12, one greater than the Sea Gulls 11. CNU also led in corner kicks with six while SSU took only four.
